

Football is on the map

To celebrate the 150th anniversaries of the Football Association and London Underground, the organisations have created a Tube map with a difference.

Plotted identically to the original, it shows the 367 Tube, Docklands Light Railway (DLR) and Overground stations across the 14 lines re-named as football greats. Players past and present have been used with some having special relevance to their particular station. Leytonstone is David Beckham to mark the place of his birth, Arsenal is changed to the club's star midfielder Jack Wilshere and Upton Park becomes Bobby Moore in homage to the 1966

World Cup winning captain, who played for most of his career at nearby West Ham. The lines themselves will also hold significance, with the DLR using names of pre-war players such as Arsenal legend Bobby Hapgood and Everton's goal machine, Dixie Dean. The Victoria line will feature stars of the women's game including Kelly Smith and Rachel Yankey. The maps cost £14.99 and will be available to buy from the London Transport Museum Shop in Covent Garden, the Wembley shop and the Transport for London online shop. Metro Travel is giving away five of these special edition maps. For your chance to win, email metrocompetitions@tfl.gov.uk by 8pm this evening with your name and contact number. Winners will be picked at random.

TfL bus route consultation

TRANSPORT for London (TfL) has launched a public consultation seeking views on the future of a number of diverted bus routes. In April 2009, routes 61, 273 and 661 were placed on diversion following the closure of Chislehurst Road bridge to buses to use Leeson's Hill, Cray Avenue and Poverest Road. TfL proposes to make the current service patterns permanent and is seeking the views of local residents and passengers. The consultation is available on the TfL website, consultations.tfl.gov.uk, and closes on Friday November 8, after which a final decision will be made.

Postal responses to the consultation may be sent to: FREEPOST TFL CONSULTATIONS
