

LT NEWS

'Quicker by Underground' says Marlene

Scene: the star dressing room at Wimbledon Theatre. Marlene Dietrich telephones her daughter in South Kensington and invites her to the theatre. Less than 30 minutes later super star Miss Dietrich greets her daughter and says: "How did you get here so quickly?" Back comes the answer: "I came by Underground."

The following night Miss Dietrich sent away her Rolls from the London hotel where she was staying and travelled to Wimbledon by District line. She said: "The night before it had taken an hour by car and it was very tiresome. I decided I would follow my daughter's example."

White suit

There is Marlene (right) in an immaculate white suit as she steps off the train at Wimbledon. The astonishing thing is that on the journey only one man, a West Indian, appeared to recognise the star and asked for her autograph.

And what does the ever-glamorous Marlene think of London's Underground? "It must be the best in the world" she said. "I'm astonished that it extends so far out from the centre of London."

'NO ROW WITH GLC' — CHAIRMAN

Stories of a split between London Transport and the Greater London Council are completely unfounded, Chairman Sir Richard Way said this week.

He was hitting back at Press suggestions of soured relations following the discussions with the Leader of the Council and some of his colleagues. They understood our view and saw the necessity for the action we were proposing to take.

It was emphasised

Turning to Telstar, Sir Richard went on: "We have concluded a very favourable commercial deal at far below current market values. This was a management issue and not the sort of thing we are

Why LT is renting Telstar

Chief estate manager Ian McGillivray has official block

'Quicker by Underground' says Marlene

Scene: the star dressing room at Wimbledon Theatre. Marlene Dietrich telephones her daughter in South Kensington and invites her to the theatre. Less than 30 minutes later super star Miss Dietrich greets her daughter and says: "How did you get here so quickly?" Back comes the answer: "I came by Underground."

The following night Miss Dietrich sent away her Rolls from the London hotel where she was staying and travelled to Wimbledon by District line. She said: "The night before it had taken an hour by car and it was very tiresome. I decided I would follow my daughter's example."

White suit

There is Marlene (right) in an immaculate white suit as she steps off the train at Wimbledon. The astonishing thing is that on the journey only one man, a West Indian, appeared to recognise the star and asked for her autograph.

And what does the ever-glamorous Marlene think of London's Underground? "It must be the best in the world she said. I'm astonished that it extends so far out from the centre of London."

'NO ROW WITH GLC'

—CHAIRMAN

Stories of a split between London Transport and the Greater London Council are completely unfounded, Chairman Sir Richard Way said this week.

He was hitting back at Press suggestions of soured relations following the discussions with the Leader of the Council and some of his colleagues. They understood our view and saw the necessity for the action we were proposing to take.

It was emphasised

Turning to Telstar, Sir Richard went on: "We have concluded a very favourable commercial deal at far below current market values. This was a management issue and not the sort of thing we are

Why LT is renting Telstar

Chief estate manager Ian McGillivray has

office block

'Quicker by Underground' says Marlene

Scene: the star dressing room at Wimbledon Theatre. Marlene Dietrich telephones her daughter in South Kensington and invites her to the theatre. Less than 30 minutes later super star Miss Dietrich greets her daughter and says: "How did you get here so quickly?" Back comes the answer: "I came by Underground."

The following night Miss Dietrich sent away her Rolls from the London hotel where she was staying and travelled to Wimbledon by District line. She said: "The night before it had taken an hour by car and it was very tiresome. I decided I would follow my daughter's example."

White suit

There is Marlene (right) in an immaculate white suit as she steps off the train at Wimbledon. The astonishing thing is that on the journey only one man, a West Indian, appeared to recognise the star and asked for her autograph.

And what does the ever-glamorous Marlene think of London's Underground? "It must be the best in the world," she said. "I'm astonished that it extends so far out from the centre of London."

'NO ROW WITH GLC'

—CHAIRMAN

Stories of a split between London Transport and the Greater London Council are completely unfounded, Chairman Sir Richard Way said this week.

He was hitting back at Press suggestions of soured relations following the discussions with the Leader of the Council and some of his colleagues. They understood our view and saw the necessity for the action we were proposing to take.

"It was emphasised

Turning to Telstar, Sir Richard went on: "We have concluded a very favourable commercial deal at far below current market values. This was a management issue and not the sort of thing we are

Why LT is renting Telstar

Chief estate manager Ian McGillivray has

office block