

Fares fair: Always have a valid ticket to travel, and remember to touch in and out

Don't forget to touch in and out

PASSENGERS ARE REMINDED TO PAY FOR THEIR JOURNEYS AS LOCKDOWN EASES

WITH the latest easing of lockdown restrictions this week and more workplaces opening again, many people will be travelling for the first time in a while.

Extensive cleaning regimes, social distancing and the requirement to wear a face covering mean that the transport network remains safe.

With a near-normal service currently in operation, London's transport is ready to take you to where you're going, but TfL is reminding passengers of the need to touch in and out whenever entering or exiting a station and to always have a valid ticket to travel.

Before the pandemic, 72 per cent of TfL's income came from fares, and the transport network can only run safely and reliably if everyone who uses it also pays for it.

There are a number of flexible payment options for passengers, including using contactless payment or an Oyster card. These allow customers to travel flexibly at quieter times by simply touching in and out and only paying for the journeys they make, reducing the need to queue or buy tickets in the station. Pay as you go fares are also capped so customers don't have to buy a Travelcard in advance.

In addition, bus and tram customers can benefit from the Hopper fare, which enables passengers to make unlimited journeys for £1.55 within one hour of touching in. The Hopper fare also applies to discounted rate travel.

Oyster customers can top up online from any Oyster stop or even use the TfL Oyster and contactless app to top up on the go, as well as manage your cards and payments.

TfL also offers a number of free and discounted travel schemes for those who are eligible, including the Older Person's Freedom Pass and Disabled Person's Freedom Pass. For more information on TfL's fares, visit tfl.gov.uk/fares

Cover up: Face coverings are mandatory on all TfL services

WEAR A FACE COVERING ON PUBLIC TRANSPORT TO PROTECT EACH OTHER

You must do this at all times when travelling on TfL services, unless you are exempt. Face coverings are there to protect those around you and they also protect you.

For more information, search TfL face coverings.

Kennington station becomes Zone 1/2

All change: Kennington is now a Zone 1/2 station

AHEAD of the opening of the Northern Line Extension this autumn, Kennington station has changed from a Zone 2 to a Zone 1/2 station this week.

This change, which was a condition of the funding agreement for the extension scheme, will ensure that, once the new step-free stations at Battersea Power Station and Nine Elms are open, customers travelling to and from central London will only pay a Zone 1 fare.

Those who currently travel between Kennington and central London will also see their single pay as you go fare reduced to £2.40, regardless of what time they travel.

The fare zone change also means that those who travel from the station towards Balham, Tooting and Morden will also not pay any extra as a result of the extension.

Using pay as you go with contactless and Oyster, customers simply touch in and out, reducing the need to queue or buy tickets in the station. They only pay for the journeys they make and with daily capping, they will always pay less than a Day Travelcard.
