

Family days out at Acton Depot

TAKE a peek at some of the transport treasures from the past at London Transport Museum's Acton Depot this Saturday and Sunday.

The depot houses more than 400,000 objects such as vintage Underground logo signs, train carriages, uniforms, photographs, engineering drawings and unusual exhibits that help to tell the hidden story of London and its iconic transport network.

Visitors to the open weekend will be able to ride on a miniature railway, take part in a guided bus pit tour and watch demonstrations of how the Emergency Response Team deals with incidents on the transport system.

You can even hear about some of the secret tunnels in the capital and find out about the disused stations on the Underground in a talk from the editor of the Londonist, Matt Brown.

Movie buffs can enjoy rare films from the museum's archives including a screening of the 1922 film 'Solving London's Traffic Problem' with live commentary from curator Simon Murphy.

There's plenty for kids, too. Children aged between three and 12 can discover all about various engineering techniques and build spaghetti bridges, tricky towers and sand tunnels. Plus there are heritage bus rides for all.

Getting there: the event runs from 11am to 5pm at Acton Depot this Saturday and Sunday. The nearest Tube station is Acton Town on the District and Piccadilly lines. Tickets cost £10, concessions £8 and under-16s go free.

Did you know?

You can find your nearest bus stop, Tube station, river pier or tram service from anywhere in the capital simply by using GPS.

Log on to tfl.gov.uk and click the 'Nearby' tool, any GPS-enabled device will pinpoint your location and show the nearest public transport options plotted on a map. It will also give live status and departure information.

Plan ahead with a Visitor Oyster card

DO you have friends or family visiting London this summer? They could save time by buying a Visitor Oyster card before they arrive.

The cards work in exactly the same way as normal Oyster cards but are posted to their home address, whether they live outside the capital – or overseas.

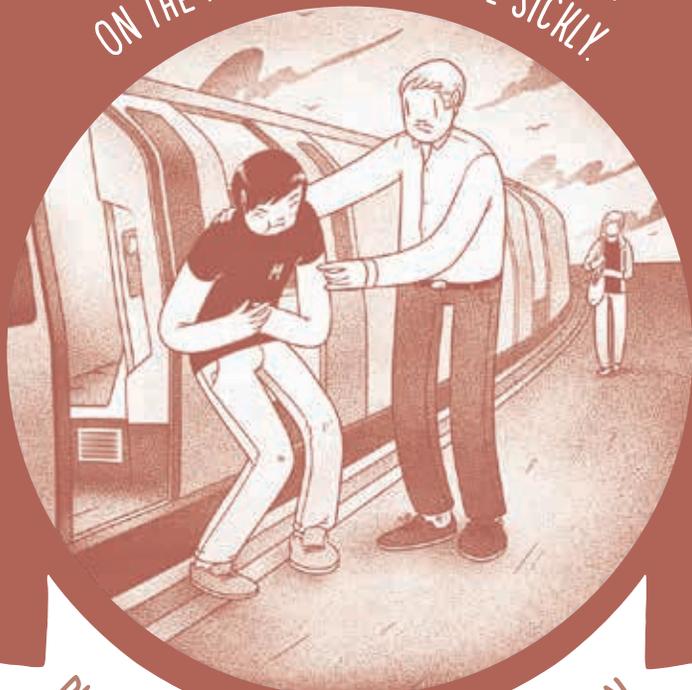

The Visitor Oyster card costs £3 (non-refundable) plus postage and can be pre-loaded with pay as you go credit, in sums of either £10, £15, £20, £25, £30, £35, £40 or £50.

Delivery to a UK address typically takes between two and four days, and delivery abroad is normally around eight to 14 days.

By planning ahead, it means visitors are ready to start using London's public transport from the moment they arrive.

Visitor Oyster cards also give holders a number of discounts at the capital's attractions and restaurants. More information is available at visitorshop.tfl.gov.uk
