

Halloween horrors at Covent Garden

DELVE into London's dark and deadly past and sample some spooky cocktails at London Transport Museum's special Halloween Friday Late this week.

Hear terrifying tales about the 'Corpse on the Tube' and other urban London legends, and scare your spiritual senses with a tarot consultation and card reading.

There will be lots of ghoulish goings-on, mad make-up and the chance to have weird and gruesome wounds painted on your face and limbs.

Take part in the Deadly London pub quiz and watch out for the ghosts: they will be gliding around the museum gallery telling all sorts of scary stories!

Come in costume and you will be in for a fantastically freaky treat – or trick.

Tickets for Halloween: Subterranean Scream are £10 (concessions £8). For more details, visit www.ltmuseum.co.uk. Nearest Tube, Covent Garden.

Book tickets now for Aldwych winter tours

IF you'd like the opportunity to visit one of London's most filmed stations, you need to act fast as tickets sell out quickly.

A new season of the ever-popular tours of Aldwych station has just been announced for January and February.

Aldwych is regarded as one of London's mysterious places, holding secrets and memories of the city's forgotten life and work underground. It opened to the public in 1907 as Strand, was never heavily used as originally intended, and closed nearly a century later in 1994.

The station has had a varied history; it provided shelter to Londoners during the Blitz and has been used for film and TV shoots including Sherlock, Mr Selfridge and Atonement.

The tours start on January 22 and will run Thursday to Sunday until February 15. They will involve groups of up to 40 people being escorted by museum volunteers into the ticket hall and then down 160 steps to the platforms and inter-connecting walkways - including some that have very rarely been seen by the public.

Although there is nothing unsuitable about the content of the tour, children under 16 are not allowed to attend.
