Work continues at Finsbury Park

THE Wells Terrace entrance to Finsbury Park Tube station will close on July 18.

It is part of work to improve accessibility and security, reduce congestion and help speed up journeys.

Two new lift shafts will be built to enable step-free access to all platforms and lines. New ticket gates have already been installed, and the capacity of the spiral staircases has been doubled. Future work will create a larger western entrance that will add a new step-free access route from 2019.

David Hughes, director of strategy and service development for London Underground, said: 'Finsbury Park is one of the busiest stations in north London, with over 27 million people using it every year.'

'The demand will only increase as the population of London gets larger, and the improvements being made will allow the station to deal with this demand. The introduction of larger ticket halls and step-free access will make a real, positive difference to customers' journeys.'

Temporary closure of footbridge at Epping

FROM Monday until mid-September, the footbridge at Epping station will be closed while it is strengthened and repainted.

Customers will be able to use an alternative footbridge between Hillcrest Way and Station Approach, and the gate on Hillcrest Way will remain open all day. However, customers are advised to check which platform their train will depart from before touching in with their Oyster or contactless payment card.

There will be signs at the station and staff will keep customers informed of train departures.

A tailored talk

FASHION designer Wayne Hemingway MBE will be in conversation with BBC Radio London broadcaster Robert Elms in Covent Garden on Tuesday evening, discussing TfL staff uniforms.

Wayne (pictured above), founder of the Red or Dead label, was the creative mind behind the new look worn by Tube employees so they are more easily recognised around stations.

Starting at 7pm on July 5 at London Transport Museum, the discussion will cover Wayne's inspiration and the challenges he faced in designing a practical, modern and fit-for-purpose uniform, with mix and match garment options, for such a large workforce.
