Step-free coming to South Kensington

SOUTH Kensington Tube station will be upgraded as part of a plan to develop the surrounding land, with TfL announcing development company Native Land as its preferred joint venture partner.

The development will be respectful to the character of the local area, which forms a gateway to one of London's most popular cultural hotspots, and will provide step-free access to the District and Circle line platforms via a new entrance on Thurloe Street.

The scheme will also improve access to the pedestrian subway leading to local destinations, including the Science Museum, Imperial College, the Natural History Museum and the Victoria and Albert Museum.

Located in the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea, South Kensington is one of the busiest stations on the Underground network. More than 34 million District, Circle and Piccadilly line customers a year use it to travel to London's museum quarter.

The development will also improve the properties around the station, with the potential to create new opportunities on TfL land from Pelham Street to Thurloe Square. The site also includes the main station entrances through the Grade II-listed shopping arcade, which will be preserved and restored, and a second entrance via the Grade II-listed pedestrian subway.

Tram track work this Easter

CUSTOMERS on London Trams can expect a more reliable service following essential track upgrade work, taking place in Croydon.

The upgrade work involves replacing tracks between George Street and Church Street, and from the junction of Cherry Orchard Road to Addiscombe Road.

Throughout the work, there will be no tram services from Reeves Corner to Sandilands from Friday March 30 until Wednesday April 4, and from East Croydon to Sandilands from Friday March 30 until Sunday April 8.

A replacement bus service will run from Friday March 30 to Wednesday April 4 between Waddon Marsh and Sandilands tram stops, also stopping at Vicarage Road for Wandle Park. Customers for intermediate stops should use existing bus routes.

Full tram services will resume on Monday April 9. This work forms part of a wider programme of routine track replacement.
