

Grab your boots for an autumn amble

Londoners can join guided walks around the capital for free next month during TfL's Autumn Ambles weekend.

THE 37 walks, taking place on October 17 and 18, showcase some of the city's best attractions, parks, woodland, rivers and open spaces and range from short strolls to taxing trails.

Highlights include a walk from City Hall to Canary Wharf via Tower Bridge, an excursion around the backstreets and alleys of the West End, a tour through historic Bloomsbury and a leisurely promenade along the Regent's Canal.

There will also be a walk along part of the Capital Ring, including a ferry ride across the Thames where ramblers can explore the Royal Docks and Beckton Park before reaching the Lower Lea Valley to see the largest remaining 18th century tidal mill at Three Mills.

■ All walks are led by experienced Walk London guides, start within easy reach of public transport and there's no need to book. For details of all the walks, visit www.walklondon.org.uk

IT'S your last chance to enjoy the fun and activities on the river as London's Totally Thames festival draws to a spectacular close.

The month-long season of river-related events this September finishes with a flourish with art, music, family fun, talks, walks and boats.

Discover all about Your River this weekend at The Museum of London Docklands. There will be storytelling, music and crafts. Nearest stations: West India Quay DLR, Canary Wharf Tube or by boat to Canary Wharf Pier. Head down to Greenwich for ghost

While you're there, take a look down river – the mighty Thames Flood Barrier will be in operation. It's an unusual spectacle as it is closed just once a year!
