Improving Tube services

David Waboso, LU's director of Capital Programmes, received his CBE earlier this week. He said: 'Modernising the Underground is a huge but rewarding task. It has been a privilege to work alongside very talented colleagues to deliver significant improvements with more trains, increased capacity, better signalling and improved reliability which has helped LU deliver one of the most frequent metro services in the world for our customers.'

For nearly two decades David has helped to improve London's transport network to ensure the capital continues to respond to the needs of a growing population. He is now leading the largest modernisation programme in the Tube's history.

Finding love on the line

A TUBE carriage or a station platform may not seem the obvious place for people to fall in love, but it's not as unusual as you might think.

To mark Valentine's Day, here are some people's stories of how they found romance on the move:

He was a bus driver with a luminous smile, I was having a very bad day. That beautiful smile on that miserable November day on a 258 bus made me happy that day – and indeed it would make me happy for six years to come. We have since parted ways, but he will always have a place in my heart. He taught me how to love and to be loved.

My husband and I met at the 220 bus stop in Scrubbs Lane in 1973. Independently, we both used the bus to go to Queen's Park Rangers games at Loftus Road. We got chatting over many weeks and started to go to matches together. We married in 1974 and all being well, this September with four children and three grandchildren later, we celebrate being married 40 years. So if anyone is looking for a husband, go to QPR by bus!

Three years ago, I got on a District line train at Victoria, and sat opposite a lovely looking girl. We exchanged shy glances and smiles until I built up enough courage to talk with her. We clicked immediately and I'm so excited that the beautiful stranger on the Tube will become my wife next month.

On one of our first dates, my girlfriend and I found a lovely little plant on the Victoria line. She fell in love with it and I fell in love with her. Four years later Victoria, as the plant is predictably called, sits pretty on our mantelpiece reminding us of our love. If Victoria is yours, sorry!
